WILLIAMS On Saturday, September 14, 1895, at 12 a.m., Harrissa Williams, be-loved husband of Mrs. Mary E. Williams, Funeral from residence, 2014 I street porthwest, at 3 p. m. Monday, 16th inst.

IN MEMORIAM. Died, September 2, 1895, Miss Lucy Fawcett. .

A patient, gentle sufferer
Bas left this world of strife,
To dwell among the blessed,
To enter into life;
Walking in her Master's footsteps,
She reached the happy abore,
To live among the angels
In peace, forevermore.

In the Saviour's vineyard She labored many years

In the Saviour's vineyard
She labored many years.
Boothing the cup of sorrow;
Wining away its tears;
Mouraing with those who mourn,
Weeping with those who weep,
With fervent prayers ascending
To whom all vigils keep.

From this land of pain and death,
From this land of sin.
Ble sought the heavenly portals;
Her spirit entered in.
Ble fought life's battle bravely,
The victory she has won;

Oh, Lord! Thy Will be done. Aspiring not for worldly honors, Caring naught for worldly fame; Buriring to do the Master's will, Asking all things in His name. While we miss thee, sadly miss thee, Yet 'lls best to know thy spirit Has found rest, sweet rest. Alexandira, September 10.

tore cosmopolitan in its characteristics. That provincialism, of which the papers far and near formerly made frequent and merry ntion, is now almost a thing of the past.

In no way is this changed state of affairs nore perceptible than in regard to the outdoor life of the people. They seemed to book of life in this respect, and with the happiest results. Whereas, formerly it was not considered good form for the fashion ables to be seen at the front window of their residences, no matter how warm the evening; now they are not only seen at the windows, but for the most part spend the warm afternoons and evenings after a

Not infrequently ice ten is served to guests during the evening on the front steps of the fashionable houses, where they may have stopped for a sociable call. When it is practicable, the ten or some similar cool drink is served on the lawn or grass plat, where the company is seated enjoying the who, when so minded, can entertain their friends in true roof garden style. This is accomplished by having the space over the porte cocheres at the entrance finished with a hard wood floor and fitted up with

The afternoon ten is one of the best mediums in the fashionable world for spelling one's legitimate appetite for dinner. It is also one of the most imperceptible ways of making a polite gourmand of one's self, that is provided there are a number of reas attended the same afternoon.

It is astonishing the amount one can man-age to eat in this way without being in the slightest degree aware of it. To those who abhor the form of entertainment known as afternoon teas, and make it a cust-iron rule never to eat the slightest thing, it is possible to return home after going through such a social ordeal and enjoying with a good appetite the good dinner awaiting them. Others, however, who are not so strong-willed, even though they may be fully aware that a good dinner awaits them at home, cannot refrain from partaking of ome of the good things at each tea.

There is a young mairon of the West End who is passionately fond of afternoon tens, and never, if possible, misses an op-portunity of attending any to which she is invited. Her husband laughingly de-clares that not only does she take something at each and every tea, but that if he were not at hand to prevent such a thing she would fairly cat the ribbons off the sand-

The two largest amateur roof gardens of this kind in Washington are those over the driveway of the British embassy and at the former Windom-Blaine house on Scott Circle, occupied for some years past by Mr. and Mrs. Muns, of Chicago. Both of these small roof gardens are supplied with pretty striped awnings that keep them from becoming too heated during the day to be pleasant in the even-

Another phase of the Parisian life perceptible during the summer in Washington is the growing habit of the people to stop in the course of their afternoon or even-ing drive to enjoy a glass of soda or a saucer of ice cream while seated in the carriage in front of the establishment. It is a habit that is likely to grow and become vastly more popular within the next few years now that it has been fairly inaugurated than many of the fashionable fads of the hour.

The reason for this is not only on account of the picturesqueness of the fashion, but because it is really far more luxurious and comfortable than to alight from the carriage and sit down in a warm room to partake of ice cream. It was not so long since that society has forgotten it that an innovation of this sort raised such a storm of talk and open comment that it was not repeated. The innovation was introduced by one of the fashionable women, who, having just returned from Paris, made that summer memorable by regularly every afternoon while she remained in town during the warm weather having drinks brought out to ber and any guest she might bave, while they remained seated in her open carriage

As her residence was on one of the most prominent avenues in the west end, it did not take long for this performance to be noised abroad throughout society and thereby set everyone talking to such extent that when the hubbub finally reached the cars of the woman herself she left the city in disgust and high dudgeon, declaring that Washington was the slowest and most gossipy city in the world.

There is a young woman in the West End whose state of mind and condition generally is giving her family considerable anxiety. This is occasioned by the fact that so far they have been unable to satphysician should be called in is a point which they have so far failed to reach a unanimous verdict. The old family servant would seem to be the wisest of the household. Recently when the young woman's symptoms were cil the old darky, after gravely listening to the talk, caused an all around laugh by astutely remarking: "Deed, Miss Mary's bilous. Else she's in love. The sky was momentarily growing blacker and blacker while the mutterings of thunder were plainly heard. One of the family relt herself called upon to expostulate with the flippant one beening weather, she was fastening her hat on to sally forth.

"You certainly are not going out in the rain in that white gown," said her sister. "Why not?" was the quick retort. "It is a duck suit."

greater number of brilliant social events than usually occurs so early in the season.

The Brock-Rakemann wedding was in every respect one of the most notable ever witnessed in Washington, outside door life of the people. They seemed to have borrowed a chapter out of the Parisian's The reputation of the groom as a musical director, the charm of the bride, who, for so many years, has been one of the load-stones of the Capitol Hill coterie, and the geniality of the bost of the Congressional, all combined to make this wedding one

The New Woman.

The new woman has more sense than her grandmother, for she does not believe in stove. She derives no pleasure from loaves of well-browned home-made bread when the preparing of them kept ber in the kitches when she might have been enjoying an in-tellectual feast in the library. She does not bother with baking, because she knows that the modern bakery will furnish her with bread superior to that of her own mixing. Chas. Schneider's bread retains an enviable place in the market, and for purity and general excellency it "can't be beat." We especially recommend this bread to ladies who do not devire to do baking at home, but do desire to have good bread. For sale by all grocers.
